ASSOCIATED PRESS NEWS
FORECAST FOR THE WEEK

Fairbanks Presidential Boom and Lisbon Affair of Paramount Interest.

The coming week will be replete with interesting events at home and abroad, including the developments of the serious political situation in Portugal, the passage of the American fleet into the Pacific ocean, the renewal of the fight for Irish home rule in the British House of Commons, the formal inauguration of Vice-President Fairbanks's Presidential candidacy by his home State, and Attorney-General Bonaparte's inauguration of the federal suits against the so-called Harriman-Pacific railroad merger.

The startling happenings at Lisbon Saturday and the prospects of developments of a serious political character during the week have brought Portugal to the center of the foreign news field.

Congressional Legislation.

Congress promises nothing sensational during the week. After devoting part of the day Monday to bills taken up under suspension of the rules, the House will continue its consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, and it is probable that it will be before the House until the middle of the week, if not longer. It will be followed by the pension appropriation bill, and that, in turn, by the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bills.

The pension bill will carry a provision for the consolidation of all pension agencies of the country into one, and it will doubtless occasion considerable debate and much opposition.

Among the bills which will be passed tomorrow under suspension of the rules is the measure increasing widows' pensions to $12. It is expected to go through after brief discussion, although it will involve an additional expenditure of about $12,000,000 annually.

The urgent deficiency appropriation bill will be reported to the Senate Monday and will be taken up Tuesday.

Fleet at Magellan Straits.

After four days' coaling at Punta Arenas, the American warships will thread the remaining passages of the Magellan straits and by the end of the week they will flow into the waters of the Pacific ocean.

Home rule for Ireland will again make its appearance Tuesday, when John Redmond, the Irish leader in the House of Commons, will move a home rule resolution. It was under Redmond's leadership that Ireland rejected the government's home rule scheme presented last year, on the ground that it was a mere subterfuge. Redmond is for out and out home rule, with an Irish Parliament.

The new Japanese Ambassador at Washington, Mr. Takahira, will leave Rome tomorrow for his new post, and Wu Ting-fang, the new Chinese Minister at Washington, will start from Shanghai the following day. This will soon bring to Washington two of the best known of Oriental diplomats.

Japanese Immigration.

Mr. Takahira comes at an opportune moment, when the international relations of the United States and Japan are attracting unusual attention. He will take up the immigration question at the point where his predecessor, Viscount Aoki, left it, although the recent official exchanges between Washington and Tokyo have given a far more satisfactory aspect to the negotiations.

The Presidential candidacy of Vice-President Fairbanks will be formally launched with the choice, Tuesday next, of Indiana's delegates to the Republican national convention. The call fixes the convention for thirteen districts of the State, but does not include the delegates at large, who will be selected at a State convention. Two delegates and two alternates will be chosen in each district. It is expected that all the conventions will endorse Fairbanks for the Presidency and that the four delegates at large, selected later, will also be for him, and that he will go into the convention backed by the united delegation of his State.

Brewery Men Prepare To Wage War On Great Prohibition Army

Special to The Tribune.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2.—Putting to the forefront of the argument the declaration that beer provides the revenue to make the wheels of government go round, and that to wipe out its manufacture would result disastrously to many lines of industry, resulting in an economic upheaval, the brewers of the United States are making preparations to fight tooth and nail the reformers in whose wake drastic regulation, or absolute prohibition of the liquor traffic is extending from one end of the country to the other, especially below Mason and Dixon's line.

Some startling figures are contained in a pamphlet entitled, "Who Pays Uncle Sam's Expenses?" just circulated among Senators and Representatives in Congress. This pamphlet was put out by the brewers. They have determined to enter upon a campaign of education to head off the prohibition movement.

"Who Pays Uncle Sam's Expenses?" This question is answered in brief as follows: "The salary of the President, Vice-President, and entire Cabinet for the year is collected from the beer drinkers in one day. By midnight, January 1, the smokers of cigars and cigarettes have provided for the salary of the Supreme Court of the United States for the ensuing year. The consumers of chewing and smoking tobacco pay the salaries of our splendid navy. The snuff consumers maintain the public health and marine hospital service. The tax on oleomargarine and renovated butter pays the expense of the National Soldiers' Point Military academy. The tax on the articles named paid 52½ per cent of the tax collected on account of the Spanish-American war."

Beer thus shares with playing cards, renovated butter, and tobacco products the credit of supplying Uncle Sam with funds to keep his tremendous piece of machinery in motion. The pamphlet of the brewers says: "The frequent attacks of the temperance people on the brewers and the product of their industry, the persistent cry with which it is classed as liquor, although it contains only from 3½ to 4 per cent of alcohol, and the incessant clamor for prohibition almost everywhere in the rural parts of our country, especially in the South, are surely a justification for addressing practical, conservative business men, representing the commercial and manufacturing interests of the United States, on the economic importance of the brewing industry of our country." Figures are given showing the importance of the trade from an industrial standpoint, the number of men it employs, etc., which may be summarized as follows:

According to the census of 1900 the total value of the products of American industry was: In 1890, $1,885,861,674, and in 1900, $13,914,287,489. Within a period of forty years American industries increased in capacity sevenfold. The breweries of the United States in the same period increased their production twentyfold, or from 2,000,000 to 40,000,000 barrels.

In 1900 the breweries of the country employed 38,385 men and paid them in wages a total of $25,573,612, an average of $665 each a year. In 1905 the number of employees in breweries had increased to 48,139, the total amount paid in wages to $34,542,897, and the average wage to $718.

"Considering that the wage mean in 1900 was $438," says the brewers, "and that the highest average earnings of wage workers, those of steel engravers, were only $753, it is clear that the brewery workers belong to the class of highest-paid wage earners."

"Every industry benefits other industries, and so does the brewing industry."

Beer is a temperance drink, according to the brewers. They file Henry Watterson in evidence, who said in an editorial: "The introduction of beer in America has done more for temperance than all the temperance societies and all the prohibition laws combined."

Observer's Observations

I observe that it doesn't take much of a sprinter to catch a cold in Salt Lake City this winter. Colds, like old maids, seem anxious to be caught.

That Uncle Sam's mail wagon horses are not properly shod for icy streets. What shoes they have on are as smooth as the ice on which they are forced to travel.

That Uncle Sam is no more particular about cleaning the snow and ice off the sidewalk on the north side of his big building than some other millionaires.

That there are enough idle men in Salt Lake City who need work and who ought to have it to keep all the paved streets and the street crossings clean; and everybody knows that the streets and crossings need it.

That he who would imitate another makes a fool of himself and disgusts his friends.

That fountains of beer do not produce lives of sobriety.

That saloon keepers do not often reform drunkards, nor do saloons produce saints.

That a vicious cur is not greatly improved by being penned up with other vicious ones.

That the Almighty is having a time trying to make men out of some of the material he is compelled to use.

That police headquarters has been struck by an earthquake.

That the Deseret News is very close-mouthed on the J. M. Tanner question.

That Joseph F. hasn't as yet found anything wrong in the life of Brother Tanner.

That the wonder of all the people is that there is not more of them (plural marriages), when there is such a rake-off with them.

That there are signs all about us that hell is full to overflowing. And yet crowds are pushing that way.

That Chief Pitt and a few of the preachers have positive convictions as to the control of the social evil.

That two or three streets and alleys have had enough free advertising in the last two weeks to give them good patronage for the next six months.

That the less some people know about a subject, the more readily they express an opinion on it.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

SPENDS ALMOST TEN YEARS IN JAIL

A Chink is the city's star boarder.

In 3651 days, or ten years, Hong Wong, Celestial, has spent only 200 outside the city bastille. He greets the jail with a smile. He knows every nook and turn of it. He is perfectly at home there. In fact, in the last ten years he has made it his home.

Hong Wong belongs to that class of undesirable citizenship classed as vagrants. He made his debut in that society ten years ago and has not receded nor advanced from his original standing.

Wong can't stand freedom any better than some people can stand prosperity, though. A few days ago he finished serving a thirty-day term of smashing big rocks into little ones and was released. He promptly made for his old resort, a South State street saloon, and drank freely and joyously from the flowing faucet. Result: He was back in Judge Diehl's court for inebriety and vagrancy again Saturday. The court looked at Wong and said, "thirty days." Wong smiled.
